canCode

       In 2016 I started canCode, a community service project (now a registered 501c3) designed to spread the passion of computer science in teens to elementary schoolers at low-income youth centers. In the spring of 2018, I was awarded $15,000 from the Palm Beach Philanthropy Tank to expand my project to include more youth centers and teenage volunteers to ultimately impact more kids. Because computer science isn't yet taught at the elementary school level, this is a great way to hook young minds. I have earned over 1,000 hours.
